A diagram showing a large square with a smaller square inside it. The large square is divided into four quadrants, labeled 1, 2, 3, and 4. The small square is also divided into four quadrants, labeled 1, 2, 3, and 4. The small square is positioned in the center of the large square, with its top-left corner at the center of the large square.

The diagram illustrates a 64-bit bus architecture. A central horizontal bus is shown, with two 32-bit data paths branching off from it. Each data path is represented by a rounded rectangle containing a 4x8 grid of cells, totaling 32 cells per path. The cells are numbered 1 through 60, with the last cell in the second path being empty. The bus is connected to various components, including a central processor unit and two peripheral units on the left and right.
